Sokolov's "School for Fools" is a linguistically titillating thrill! The narrative consists of the network of memories, both childhood and adult, of a schizophrenic, integrated into a well crafted blend of innumerable references to works from genres encompassing an impressive range of both Russian and Western cultural traditions.

A School For Fools

A School For Fools is by far the most beautiful Russian novel I have ever read. It is difficult. I had to read it super fast once and then slowly a second time. The main character is a few characters at once (schizophrenia), other characters have multiple names as related to which narrator is speaking at the time.
