Proponents of the dependent-clause translation argue that according to the grammar of the Hebrew, Genesis 1:1 should be understood as a type of substantival clause.<sup>2</sup> In both English and Hebrew, a substantival clause is an entire clause that functions like a noun. For instance, in the sentence, "I know you are watching me," the clause "you are watching me" is functioning as a direct object of the main verb "know," a function usually reserved for nouns and pronouns.
