Adolf Loos was an Austrian architect, designer, and critic whose intellectual contribution has been crucial to the advent of the Modern Movement. He was and remains one of the most important promoters of rationality in architecture and can be considered in all respects the forefather of modern architecture and design.

Villa Muller: A Work of Adolf Loos
by Kent Kleinman

Villa Muller acts as a culmination of Loos' lifetime's worth of architectural and theoretical activity. His collagist technique evident in the interior spaces appears to be bound by a set of parameters.

Villa Winternitz and Architect Adolf Loos - Prague Now
The Villa Muller is famous for it's demonstration of Adolf Loos' Raumplan, or three dimensional plan approach to designing and conceiving of a building. The elements studied therefore centered around the expression of the Raumplan through the creation of uniquely readable facade through fenestration placement, as well as investigating the circulation through the building with it's ...

The basic form of the villa is a simple cube: its facades are surprising in the austerity of the large uninterrupted areas of smooth walls with unusually tiny windows. This austere façade treatment is typical of Loos's work: to cite an aperçu from one of his own interviews: "I never play around with the façade, that's not where I live.

Loos's Raumplan reached its apotheosis in his last domestic works, Moller House and Villa Muller of 1928 and 1930. As anticipated in the open stair hall of the Rufer House, both these works are organized about displacements in the respective levels of their principal floors, elisions that serve not only to create spatial movement but also to differentiate one living area from the next.
